City's Social Life

THE GAYETIES AND ACTIVITIES OF THE WEEK

Events in Society.

If the past week be taken for a criterion is to come, the society folk will be luring the spring months. Besides numerous teas and receptions the Easter month is a very popular one for weddings and two of importance will take place this week. Miss Schleicher and Mr. Hadley will have a quiet home wedding Wednesday evening, which will be fola large reception. The marriage of Miss Woollen and Mr. Dark will take place the same evening in the First Baptist Church and there will be no reception after-

Girls Will Give a Play.

The play to be presented at English's arranged for the stage, and closely follows the original. Aeneas, son of Venus and Prince of Troy, after the downfall of exile from her native land, is founding a awfully shy, so painfully out of place, city-Carthage. Here he is hospitably rereived by the beautiful queen, who, through the strategem of Venus in substituting Cupid for the son of Aeneas, becomes infatuated with the strange king world to be found. She asks points of no who lingers at Carthage, forgetful of the high destiny to which the fates have called him. By the prayers of Iarbas, a Moorish the husband is constantly indebted to her sailor of Dido's, Jupiter is moved to inter- for suggestions and counsel. fere, and sends Mercury to remind Aeneas of the purpose with which he has set out from Troy and to admonish him to seek at once his destined Italy. Aeneas obeys the admonition of the god, and, notwithstanding the entreaties and execrations of Dido, hastens his departure, his fleet sailing away in the light of Dido's funeral pyre. The play is presented in three acts of several scenes each. The first act, of Carthaginian maidens, depicts the arrival of Aeneas and his crew; the appearance of Venus in the guise of a huntress who directs him to the city, the meeting with Dido, the plots of the goddenses and the thunderstorm which overtakes the queen's hunting party. The subsequent acts portray the complaint of Iarbus to Jupiter, the consequent warning to Aeneas, his leavetaking of the queen, and the despair and suicide of Dido. The play admits of varied and beautiful spectacular effects, and is thoroughly dramatic in spirit and intense in action. While Aeneas, the venturous hero, and Dido, the ill-fated queen, are of course the central figures, a brilliant setting is made by the gods and goddesses, who, as protecting deities of each, display their power and craftiness, and the soldiers, knights and ladies in their trains form a brilliant assemblage. The songs interspersed through the play add greatly to its charm and effectiveness. The play is given to illustrate the work of the Girls' Classical School in literary appreclation, in voice culture and reading. Mr. Edgar A. Morris is stage director. Friends of the school can obtain from the pupils, or from any one connected with the school. invitations which will enable them to purchase tickets at the box office on or after April 17.

SHORT AND POINTED

The Food Was Grape-Nuts.

It helps one to know the kind of food to select if they can learn the experiences others have had.

"I consider it my duty to let you know what Grape-Nuts Food has done for me. I was suffering from dyspepsia and daily to her home in Rochester, N. Y. stomach trouble. After taking many kinds of medicines without finding relief I saw a description of Grape-Nuts Breakfast Food and began using it regularly, and in less than two weeks my indigestion was this week to visit Mrs. Robert McGrath.

"When I began using the food I weighed 125 pounds; I now weigh 160 pounds and feel stronger than I have ever felt before. Thanks and praise to the makers of Grape-Nuts." Name and address given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

There is an extensive class of professional diners-out. They study how to make themselves desirable and to be regarded as acquisitions. In this list there is a sharp sprinkling of the younger and unmarried will take everything in sight, and when not in sight will ask for it. Many senators and representatives who do not keep house are superb courtier. He could whisper airy dinner. He was one of the public men who quent player, not to speak of the constant | did not bring his wife to Washington. There are others. There are members of Congress who for years have gone about everywhere, and although it is common report that they have wives at home, you these men have nothing but their salaries. sence of the wife may be traced to feelings of pride. You know, in our country, where matter how humble, men get into public position who are entirely destitute of early advantages. The wife, coming from the same class, has been kept at home, while shrink from the idea of her coming to Washington and throwing herself into that maelstrom where there is so much polish and brilliancy, so much keenness and critithat city, having set sail with his band emulation. However, it is often observed of exiles, seeking Italy, where he should wives and daughters catch on to the ways build "another Troy," is shipwrecked with of society and the amenities of good manners quicker and better than the head of a number of his comrades on the coast the family. The wife of a certain senator of Africa, where Phoenician Dido, also an | whose name is much in the papers was so long into cosmopolitan society that the hardest of hearts, the most merciless of critics were fain to pity her. There is another custom which, I imagine, is rather peculiar to Washington. Persons of note are always receiving invitations not only from those they do not know, but from those of whom they have never heard. If convenient, one never has any hesitation in accepting such invitations. Yet it does look queer to see a man come in to a dinner or whatnot and ask for the host and hostess to be pointed out to him. One evening this winter a gentleman entered a house just as the guests were getting ready to go out to dinner. No one knew him and he knew no one, but he immediately made himself comopening with a hymn to Dawn by a chorus | fortable. After awhile the host politely requested him to step out to the hall, and hen said: "Have you not made a mistake as to the house?" The stranger said: "Well, I don't know. I was invited by Mr. So and So to dine with him. I do not know him, but his house is in this neighborhood, and as I saw people coming in here I concluded this was the place." The Mr. "So and So" resided next door and the stranger was informed to that effect. You would have imagined he would have withdrawn with as little display as possible. Not so, for, as ascertained afterward, he was a member of Congress from the far West, the wild and woolly West, indeed. He came back and stood in the entrance to the drawing room and made a regular speech to the assembled company, telling them he was not sorry for his mistake, as it had enabled him to look in upon two dinner companies instead of one, and he hoped they would all have a good time. Then he bowed and Professional men and department officials are all through with the serious work of the day by 4 o'clock, as are also many of the higher grades of business men. This affords exceptional opportunities for men to make afternoon calls, yet only a very small fraction of those in a position to do so avail themselves of the occasion. The men generally do not seem to care for this kind of thing. The few who do go profit by this, for the women are so glad to see a man make his appearance in the afternoon that they almost eat him up. Very often the same man at night, when he is not a solltaire, cannot extract a passing glance from them. Even at most evening affairs, except dinners, the attendance of the old habitues steadily diminishes and if it was not for the heavy contingent of new recruits coming in every season the disproportion between the sexes would be something awful. It is a common sight at evening receptions. nore especially those at the White House, to see one poor man with from two to six women in tow. Pity his sufferings. You may always get a man for a dinner or a theater party, but you can never be sure of him for anything else.

There is a considerable class of men of leisure and purely clubmen in Washington.

The town is mad on the subject of pingpong, and no boys at marbles ever had half the enthusiasm of the grown-ups, who play the game as though their lives depended Catherine Merrill Club-April 12. "A Week on it. At the Waldorf-Astoria the gallery of the big red room is given up to pingpong, and brokers and other busy men hurry from down town in the afternoon to play. Vacant stores are furnished with layouts and in several places along Broadway crowds about the windows with faces pressed against the glass like small boys gravely watch the games.

Everywhere one hears the invitation, Come up this evening and we'll play pingoong," and there is at least one guarantee against a dull evening in private houses.
